

CAN THEY TIE IT?

New Possibilities for the Democrats in the United States Senate.

They May Gain Seven Members of the Upper House.

Mr. Morton's Vote, Then, the Republican's Only Bar.

[REFUGEE TO THE EVENING WORLD.]
WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—The amendment and construction of the Republican officialiet in Washington grows daily as the magnitude of Tuesday's Democratic tide grows more evident.

First they had to concede that the Democrats had carried the House of Representatives "by a small majority." Then they saw that majority swell and swell until the Republican minority was reduced to a practically helpless.

And now it is the control of the upper House, the once steady Senate, which the present dominant party sees apparently slipping from its grasp.

There are the most (to the Democrats) hopeful indications this morning that New York, New Hampshire, Illinois, Kansas, South Dakota, and Wisconsin will send Democratic Senators in place of Republicans to the Fifty-second Congress.

Hold on to the Republican majority of fourteen reduced to a majority of two.

But even this meager majority is not fully assured, for there is information from Colorado which casts at least a shade of doubt on Senator Teller's chances of return.

Given senators from the first six states named and having one from Colorado added, the Democrats would tie the Republicans.

The state affairs at the Capital would then be entirely in the balance.

A Republican Administration would be left, it is true, but it would be deprived of the support of a majority in the Senate, and would be lost entirely through the future of a number of the party's most energetic men to secure re-election.

The President Morton's vote would be the key to the Democratic possession of the Senate, an that only on the strictest of party grounds.

The other seven who would obtain for new constitutional tariff legislation are self-evident.

It all comes together for the good of them who love their country, for the sake of an old decoration altered in an effort to the Democrat who took in all these possibilities, last evening.

Pennsylvania's Summary.
[SPECIAL TO THE EVENING WORLD.]
PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 8.—Changes in the course of computation make Patterson's plurality for Lieutenant-Governor 17,688. Watters, Rep., for Governor, has a plurality of about 6,000; Burke, for Governor, & Mrs. Benten, Democratic candidate for Congress will contest Johnson's seat.

The State's Congressmen will be 17 Republicans to 11 Democrats. The new State Senate will include 30 Republicans and 20

Democrats. In the lower House there will be 124 Republicans, 87 Democrats and 51 Fusionists. A Republic joint major loss of 32.

New York's Senatorship.
[SPECIAL TO THE EVENING WORLD.]
ALBANY, Nov. 8.—With an almost certain majority of four to count on, at the start, in the joint ballot of the New York State Legislature, and with the possibilities involved in the outcome of six contests over seats in the Assembly, there is no reason why the Democrats shouldn't be confident, as they are, on an election of a United States Senator from their party to succeed Mr. Evans.

The contests are in Yates County, Clinton County, Montgomery County, the First Dutchess District, Second Saratoga and Third Oneida.

These contests will make lively times at the next session, but out of it all the Democratic expects to come in a manner adding to the dignity and importance of Tuesday's triumphs the country over.

Jo the talk about the proper plan to elect to the United States Senate, Gov. Hill figures most prominently, yet there is a disposition in some quarters to insist that the candidate should be a New York City man; and a list of prominent metropolitan Democrats is called up sufficiently long in itself to insure respect for a party which, from a single city, could summon so many men fit for the place and the responsibility.

Congressman Flower, Col. F. A. Conkling, Eugene Kelly, Frederick R. Conkling, Henry L. Clinton and Gen. H. W. Slocum of Brooklyn, are only a few of the names mentioned in this connection. Grover Cleveland is another.

It Looks Like Morris in Connecticut To-Day.

[SPECIAL TO THE EVENING WORLD.]
HARTFORD, Conn., Nov. 8.—The unusual interest in the fate of the set of returns from every town, now live at the Secretary of State's office, gives Morris, Dem., for Governor a popular majority of 32.

Complications in Michigan.
[SPECIAL TO THE EVENING WORLD.]
DETROIT, Mich., Nov. 8.—There is yet to be settled in the Eighth, Ninth and Eleventh Congressional districts, and a contest seems inevitable in the Eleventh, where 400 Republican ballots were thrown out because of an error in the returns necessary to fix the standing of the State Senate. The House is Deadlocked.

The President Morton's vote would be the key to the Democratic possession of the Senate, an that only on the strictest of party grounds.

The other seven who would obtain for new constitutional tariff legislation are self-evident.

It all comes together for the good of them who love their country, for the sake of an old decoration altered in an effort to the Democrat who took in all these possibilities, last evening.

A Contest in North Dakota.
[SPECIAL TO THE EVENING WORLD.]
FARGO, N. D., Nov. 8.—The bulletin at Republican headquarters announces the election of the entire Republican ticket, with the exception of Governor, by pluralities ranging from 1,500 to 6,000. Bloyd, Dem., for Governor, will get about 1,000 plurality.

A Contest in North Dakota.
[SPECIAL TO THE EVENING WORLD.]
PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 8.—Changes in the course of computation make Patterson's plurality for Lieutenant-Governor 17,688. Watters, Rep., for Governor, has a plurality of about 6,000; Burke, for Governor, & Mrs. Benten, Democratic candidate for Congress will contest Johnson's seat.

The State's Congressmen will be 17

Republicans to 11 Democrats. The new

State Senate will include 30 Republicans and 20

SIX WEEKS TO BREAKFAST.

DR. CROSBY REMAINS MUTE.
But Signor Succi Says He Is Not Yet Hungry.

He Confesses, However, That He Feels as Though He Had Been Thrashed.

This is the third day of Mr. Giovanni Succi's fast, and it's only six weeks to breakfast now.

The little Italian had twenty-seven ounces of water and two cigars for refreshments during the twenty-four hours ending at 6:30 this morning, and he bounded out of bed with agility when an EVENING WORLD reporter called.

In pajamas and joy the Signor stepped upon the scales and found that he tipped the beam at 138 pounds.

He had lost three pounds of flesh in twenty-four hours, but he increased his happiness in inverse ratio, and slapping his big chest declared that he "feels very good! Better as ever."

For the reporter he took off his own temperature, thrusting into his mouth one of those pretty and expensive little glass thermometers which the doctor puts under the tongue.

It registered 98 degrees, and the Signor's pulse beat 68 times to the minute under the finger of the reporter.

Succi went to bed at 11:30 last night, and his reporters recorded on their minds that he slept peacefully, and was apparently awake several times during the night, though he did not speak.

It was 6:45 this morning when an attendant awakened the sleeper. After a moment's conversation Succi turned his back to the world again and slept on, awaking at 8:15 o'clock.

The Signor drew on a pair of stockings from his pocket, his trim little feet into a pair of leather shoes, and then sprang into his darter here and there through the three rooms that constitute his suite, the washer room, the kitchen, the sitting room, to guard against his surprise outfit, perhaps, of punishment, but it was so light.

As an EVENING WORLD reporter called at Dr. Crosby's house at 119 East Newmarket Street this morning, and sent in his card, the doctor sent back word that he did not care to see reporters.

It was 6:45 this morning when an attendant awakened the sleeper. After a moment's conversation Succi turned his back to the world again and slept on, awaking at 8:15 o'clock.

The Signor drew on a pair of stockings from his pocket, his trim little feet into a pair of leather shoes, and then sprang into his darter here and there through the three rooms that constitute his suite, the washer room, the kitchen, the sitting room, to guard against his surprise outfit, perhaps, of punishment, but it was so light.

As an EVENING WORLD reporter called at Dr. Crosby's house at 119 East Newmarket Street this morning, and sent in his card, the doctor sent back word that he did not care to see reporters.

It was 6:45 this morning when an attendant awakened the sleeper. After a moment's conversation Succi turned his back to the world again and slept on, awaking at 8:15 o'clock.

The Signor drew on a pair of stockings from his pocket, his trim little feet into a pair of leather shoes, and then sprang into his darter here and there through the three rooms that constitute his suite, the washer room, the kitchen, the sitting room, to guard against his surprise outfit, perhaps, of punishment, but it was so light.

As an EVENING WORLD reporter called at Dr. Crosby's house at 119 East Newmarket Street this morning, and sent in his card, the doctor sent back word that he did not care to see reporters.

It was 6:45 this morning when an attendant awakened the sleeper. After a moment's conversation Succi turned his back to the world again and slept on, awaking at 8:15 o'clock.

The Signor drew on a pair of stockings from his pocket, his trim little feet into a pair of leather shoes, and then sprang into his darter here and there through the three rooms that constitute his suite, the washer room, the kitchen, the sitting room, to guard against his surprise outfit, perhaps, of punishment, but it was so light.

As an EVENING WORLD reporter called at Dr. Crosby's house at 119 East Newmarket Street this morning, and sent in his card, the doctor sent back word that he did not care to see reporters.

It was 6:45 this morning when an attendant awakened the sleeper. After a moment's conversation Succi turned his back to the world again and slept on, awaking at 8:15 o'clock.

The Signor drew on a pair of stockings from his pocket, his trim little feet into a pair of leather shoes, and then sprang into his darter here and there through the three rooms that constitute his suite, the washer room, the kitchen, the sitting room, to guard against his surprise outfit, perhaps, of punishment, but it was so light.

As an EVENING WORLD reporter called at Dr. Crosby's house at 119 East Newmarket Street this morning, and sent in his card, the doctor sent back word that he did not care to see reporters.

It was 6:45 this morning when an attendant awakened the sleeper. After a moment's conversation Succi turned his back to the world again and slept on, awaking at 8:15 o'clock.

The Signor drew on a pair of stockings from his pocket, his trim little feet into a pair of leather shoes, and then sprang into his darter here and there through the three rooms that constitute his suite, the washer room, the kitchen, the sitting room, to guard against his surprise outfit, perhaps, of punishment, but it was so light.

As an EVENING WORLD reporter called at Dr. Crosby's house at 119 East Newmarket Street this morning, and sent in his card, the doctor sent back word that he did not care to see reporters.

It was 6:45 this morning when an attendant awakened the sleeper. After a moment's conversation Succi turned his back to the world again and slept on, awaking at 8:15 o'clock.

The Signor drew on a pair of stockings from his pocket, his trim little feet into a pair of leather shoes, and then sprang into his darter here and there through the three rooms that constitute his suite, the washer room, the kitchen, the sitting room, to guard against his surprise outfit, perhaps, of punishment, but it was so light.

As an EVENING WORLD reporter called at Dr. Crosby's house at 119 East Newmarket Street this morning, and sent in his card, the doctor sent back word that he did not care to see reporters.

It was 6:45 this morning when an attendant awakened the sleeper. After a moment's conversation Succi turned his back to the world again and slept on, awaking at 8:15 o'clock.

The Signor drew on a pair of stockings from his pocket, his trim little feet into a pair of leather shoes, and then sprang into his darter here and there through the three rooms that constitute his suite, the washer room, the kitchen, the sitting room, to guard against his surprise outfit, perhaps, of punishment, but it was so light.

As an EVENING WORLD reporter called at Dr. Crosby's house at 119 East Newmarket Street this morning, and sent in his card, the doctor sent back word that he did not care to see reporters.

It was 6:45 this morning when an attendant awakened the sleeper. After a moment's conversation Succi turned his back to the world again and slept on, awaking at 8:15 o'clock.

The Signor drew on a pair of stockings from his pocket, his trim little feet into a pair of leather shoes, and then sprang into his darter here and there through the three rooms that constitute his suite, the washer room, the kitchen, the sitting room, to guard against his surprise outfit, perhaps, of punishment, but it was so light.

As an EVENING WORLD reporter called at Dr. Crosby's house at 119 East Newmarket Street this morning, and sent in his card, the doctor sent back word that he did not care to see reporters.

It was 6:45 this morning when an attendant awakened the sleeper. After a moment's conversation Succi turned his back to the world again and slept on, awaking at 8:15 o'clock.

The Signor drew on a pair of stockings from his pocket, his trim little feet into a pair of leather shoes, and then sprang into his darter here and there through the three rooms that constitute his suite, the washer room, the kitchen, the sitting room, to guard against his surprise outfit, perhaps, of punishment, but it was so light.

As an EVENING WORLD reporter called at Dr. Crosby's house at 119 East Newmarket Street this morning, and sent in his card, the doctor sent back word that he did not care to see reporters.

It was 6:45 this morning when an attendant awakened the sleeper. After a moment's conversation Succi turned his back to the world again and slept on, awaking at 8:15 o'clock.

The Signor drew on a pair of stockings from his pocket, his trim little feet into a pair of leather shoes, and then sprang into his darter here and there through the three rooms that constitute his suite, the washer room, the kitchen, the sitting room, to guard against his surprise outfit, perhaps, of punishment, but it was so light.

As an EVENING WORLD reporter called at Dr. Crosby's house at 119 East Newmarket Street this morning, and sent in his card, the doctor sent back word that he did not care to see reporters.

It was 6:45 this morning when an attendant awakened the sleeper. After a moment's conversation Succi turned his back to the world again and slept on, awaking at 8:15 o'clock.

The Signor drew on a pair of stockings from his pocket, his trim little feet into a pair of leather shoes, and then sprang into his darter here and there through the three rooms that constitute his suite, the washer room, the kitchen, the sitting room, to guard against his surprise outfit, perhaps, of punishment, but it was so light.

As an EVENING WORLD reporter called at Dr. Crosby's house at 119 East Newmarket Street this morning, and sent in his card, the doctor sent back word that he did not care to see reporters.

It was 6:45 this morning when an attendant awakened the sleeper. After a moment's conversation Succi turned his back to the world again and slept on, awaking at 8:15 o'clock.

The Signor drew on a pair of stockings from his pocket, his trim little feet into a pair of leather shoes, and then sprang into his darter here and there through the three rooms that constitute his suite, the washer room, the kitchen, the sitting room, to guard against his surprise outfit, perhaps, of punishment, but it was so light.

As an EVENING WORLD reporter called at Dr. Crosby's house at 119 East Newmarket Street this morning, and sent in his card, the doctor sent back word that he did not care to see reporters.

It was 6:45 this morning when an attendant awakened the sleeper. After a moment's conversation Succi turned his back to the world again and slept on, awaking at 8:15 o'clock.

The Signor drew on a pair of stockings from his pocket, his trim little feet into a pair of leather shoes, and then sprang into his darter here and there through the three rooms that constitute his suite, the washer room, the kitchen, the sitting room, to guard against his surprise outfit, perhaps, of punishment, but it was so light.

As an EVENING WORLD reporter called at Dr. Crosby's house at 119 East Newmarket Street this morning, and sent in his card, the doctor sent back word that he did not care to see reporters.

It was 6:45 this morning when an attendant awakened the sleeper. After a moment's conversation Succi turned his back to the world again and slept on, awaking at 8:15 o'clock.

The Signor drew on a pair of stockings from his pocket, his trim little feet into a pair of leather shoes, and then sprang into his darter here and there through the three rooms that constitute his suite, the washer room, the kitchen, the sitting room, to guard against his surprise outfit, perhaps, of punishment, but it was so light.

As an EVENING WORLD reporter called at Dr. Crosby's house at 119 East Newmarket Street this morning, and sent in his card, the doctor sent back word that he did not care to see reporters.

It was 6:45 this morning when an attendant awakened the sleeper. After a moment's conversation Succi turned his back to the world again and slept on, awaking at 8:15 o'clock.

The Signor drew on a pair of stockings from his pocket, his trim little feet into a pair of leather shoes, and then sprang into his darter here and there through the three rooms that constitute his suite, the washer room, the kitchen, the sitting room, to guard against his surprise outfit, perhaps, of punishment, but it was so light.

As an EVENING WORLD reporter called at Dr. Crosby's house at 119 East Newmarket Street this morning, and sent in his card, the doctor sent back word that he did not care to see reporters.

It was 6:45 this morning when an attendant awakened the sleeper. After a moment's conversation Succi turned his back to the world again and slept on, awaking at 8:15 o'clock.

The Signor drew on a pair of stockings from his pocket, his trim little feet into a pair of leather shoes, and then sprang into his darter here and there through the three rooms that constitute his suite, the washer room, the kitchen, the sitting room, to guard against his surprise outfit, perhaps, of punishment, but it was so light.